MAYORAL RACE HEATING UP

In-person voting has begun

By Austin Horn
The State Journal

Early in-person voting just began on Tuesday. Many in the community have already cast their ballots via mail. Campaign signs for national, state, and local races stand propped at nearly every major intersection in town and pepper lawns in residential neighborhoods.

It's safe to say campaign season for the Nov. 3 general election is in full swing. In Frankfort, the mayoral race is no exception.

Candidates Tommy Haynes and Layne Wilkerson are locked in what looks to be a close race for mayor, as the primary results put Haynes ahead of Wilkerson by just one percentage point. Haynes

Bridge's future in limbo

By Chanda Veno
The State Journal

Frankfort will have a say on the future of the Broadway Bridge.

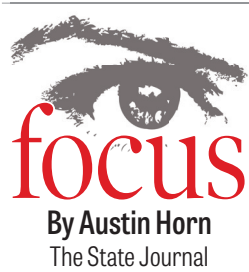

The Kentucky Transportation Cabinet announced Thursday that it will host a virtual public meeting regarding the future of the bridge that spans the Kentucky River and connects to Taylor Avenue at 6:30 p.m. on Tuesday, Oct. 27.

"The purpose of the project is to implement a

'Not where we want to be'

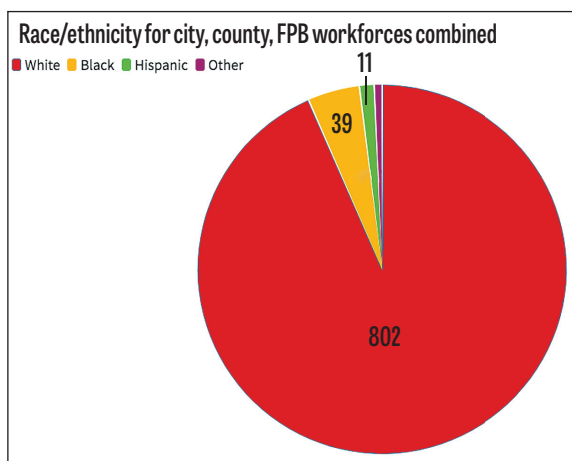

Of the combined workforces of the City of Frankfort, Franklin County and the municipal-owned Frankfort Plant Board (FPB), 93.5% are white. Only 6.5% are minorities.

Combined, these agencies have a proportion of minorities on staff equivalent to only about a third of the proportion of minorities who live in Franklin County. That 6.5% represents about a quarter of the minority population that lives within the Frankfort city limits.

Onodu's art project enhances Western Hills

By Linda Younkin
The State Journal

Western Hills senior Olivia Onodu is a busy person, and she took it upon herself to complete an art project left unfinished at the school.

For that, she has been selected as the WesBanco Student of the Week.

"Olivia has given up hours of her personal time to enhance our
